A Time When I Forgot a Valuable Object and Was Able to Retrieve It

I still remember the day I forgot my backpack on the city bus, it contained my passport, wallet, and all my important documents. I had been rushing to an appointment that morning I barely checked my seat before getting off. Because I was distracted by a phone call. The realization hit me minutes later, my hands started shaking and my heart raced. I ran back to the bus stop people were staring as I searched the ground in panic. After checking my pockets again. I tried to stay calm but my thoughts were spinning I imagined losing everything at once. The bus route was long it felt impossible to track it down. Which made the situation even more stressful. I decided to go to the bus terminal and ask for help, the staff listened patiently and contacted the driver. Waiting felt endless every second increased my fear. When the driver finally arrived holding my backpack, relief washed over me so quickly I almost cried. I thanked everyone repeatedly I couldn't stop smiling. That moment taught me an important lesson about awareness and responsibility. Even now, remembering the fear makes me double-check my belongings before leaving anywhere. (196 words)
